Stephen Mayne is a Walkley award winning business journalist by profession who spent 10 years on daily newspapers before founding Australia’s best known independent ezine, Crikey.com, in 2000. He was a press secretary in the early years of the Kennett Government before going rogue publishing the anti-Kennett website www.jeffed.com during the 1999 state election, thereby commencing a continuing journey as a genuinely independent commentator, shareholder activist and advocate for good governance. He served more than three years on Manningham City Council before his election to the City of Melbourne in October 2012, where he chairs the Finance and Governance Committee, is deputy chair of the Planning Committee and has driven council’s goal to become Australia’s most open and transparent council.
